CURFEWS CRIME AND THE REGULATION OF YOUNG PEOPLE

Second Edition with Study Guide

Times Education Supplement Book of the Week

‘... absorbing and challenging ... a must-read because it presents so much with which to disagree, while addressing so many fundamental issues, confronting so much “common sense” and undermining so many shibboleths.’

John Macbeath OBE Professor of Educational Leadership, University of Cambridge

‘The book is a useful contribution to the debate about how society has created a situation where the misbehaviour of young people is being redefined as criminal, how children are increasingly being restricted from engaging in “free play” and how this is affecting community relations.’

Chris Stanley, Head of Youth Crime Section, NACRO

DR STUART WAITON is a sociology and criminology lecturer at the University of Abertay Dundee, a director of the research group Generation Youth Issues, and a regular contributor to the Times Educational Supplement in Scotland. His latest book, The Politics of Antisocial Behaviour: Amoral Panics, is published by Routledge.

As research and reports in the press tell us that we live in a ‘walk on by society’ it appears that more than ever before we are Scared of the Kids! But why is this? Have young people become so out of control, or should we be asking more questions about the nature of adulthood? Surely with the 3000+ new laws introduced by the government in the last decade, all the CCTV cameras, ASBO’s and new community wardens the streets should be safer than ever before. Or is this actually part of the problem.

Scared of the Kids first written in 2001 and now in a second edition has never been more important as a book that examines the changing nature of relationships between adults and young people.
